

food | map

This map shows some of the foods that I eat on a regular basis and where they are coming from. While a handful of the products are from within 100 miles, many of them travel huge distances to super markets in Denver. Many are dispersed through major distributors; for example, my raspberry jam comes to me via Andros Foods in New York, but it is actually made in France.